

THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTH PACIFIC SCHOOL OF DISTANCE EDUCATION DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE

QUESTION: Discuss the role of the state in the development of the Pacific region (20 marks)

The state is a key actor in the development of the Pacific region. It is responsible for providing public goods, such as infrastructure, education, and health care. The state also plays a role in regulating the economy and protecting the environment. In the Pacific region, the state is often seen as a weak actor, with limited resources and capacity. This has led to a reliance on external aid and intervention. However, the state is still an important actor in the region, and its role is likely to become even more important in the future.

ANSWER: The state is a key actor in the development of the Pacific region. It is responsible for providing public goods, such as infrastructure, education, and health care. The state also plays a role in regulating the economy and protecting the environment. In the Pacific region, the state is often seen as a weak actor, with limited resources and capacity. This has led to a reliance on external aid and intervention. However, the state is still an important actor in the region, and its role is likely to become even more important in the future.

The state is a key actor in the development of the Pacific region. It is responsible for providing public goods, such as infrastructure, education, and health care. The state also plays a role in regulating the economy and protecting the environment. In the Pacific region, the state is often seen as a weak actor, with limited resources and capacity. This has led to a reliance on external aid and intervention. However, the state is still an important actor in the region, and its role is likely to become even more important in the future.

The state is a key actor in the development of the Pacific region. It is responsible for providing public goods, such as infrastructure, education, and health care. The state also plays a role in regulating the economy and protecting the environment. In the Pacific region, the state is often seen as a weak actor, with limited resources and capacity. This has led to a reliance on external aid and intervention. However, the state is still an important actor in the region, and its role is likely to become even more important in the future.