

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

The International Conference on Sustainable Development, organized by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank, is a landmark event in the history of global development. It brings together leaders from over 100 countries to discuss the challenges of sustainable development and to set a global agenda for the future. The conference is held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992. The main theme of the conference is 'Our Common Future', which is the title of the Brundtland Commission's report, 'Our Common Future'. The report defines sustainable development as 'development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs'. The conference is a landmark event in the history of global development. It brings together leaders from over 100 countries to discuss the challenges of sustainable development and to set a global agenda for the future. The conference is held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992. The main theme of the conference is 'Our Common Future', which is the title of the Brundtland Commission's report, 'Our Common Future'. The report defines sustainable development as 'development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs'.

The conference is a landmark event in the history of global development. It brings together leaders from over 100 countries to discuss the challenges of sustainable development and to set a global agenda for the future. The conference is held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992. The main theme of the conference is 'Our Common Future', which is the title of the Brundtland Commission's report, 'Our Common Future'. The report defines sustainable development as 'development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs'. The conference is a landmark event in the history of global development. It brings together leaders from over 100 countries to discuss the challenges of sustainable development and to set a global agenda for the future. The conference is held in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in June 1992. The main theme of the conference is 'Our Common Future', which is the title of the Brundtland Commission's report, 'Our Common Future'. The report defines sustainable development as 'development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs'.