

‘The World is Not a Cathedral’

‘The World is Not a Cathedral’ is a collection of essays by C. S. Lewis. In the first essay, Lewis discusses the nature of the church and its relationship to the world. He argues that the church should not be a ‘cathedral’ that is isolated from the world, but rather a ‘dwelling place’ where people can live and work together.

In the second essay, Lewis discusses the nature of the Christian faith and its relationship to the world. He argues that the Christian faith is not a ‘religion’ that is separate from the world, but rather a ‘way of life’ that is lived out in the world.

In the third essay, Lewis discusses the nature of the Christian life and its relationship to the world. He argues that the Christian life is not a ‘quest’ for some distant goal, but rather a ‘journey’ of discovery and growth in the world. Lewis also discusses the nature of the Christian community and its relationship to the world.

In the fourth essay, Lewis discusses the nature of the Christian hope and its relationship to the world. He argues that the Christian hope is not a ‘wish’ for some distant future, but rather a ‘confidence’ in the present world. Lewis also discusses the nature of the Christian love and its relationship to the world.
